Feedback circuits exhibit loops in the graph producing a visual appeal to the concept. The graph, being in the mathematical domain, differs from the circuit in that the graph responds to algebraic constraints. Opening loops in the math domain is allowed directly while opening loops in the circuit invariably violates a circuit condition. In effect, the algebra graph is ideal and follows ideal modeling used in approximations on circuit topologies exactly.

This approach enables designers to account fully for loading and the bi-directional nature of elements both in the feedback path and in the amplifier itself, properties many times assumed negligible and ignored. Feedback circuits are shown to be directly and completely handled with little more effort than that for open loop designs.
